“Positive emotional energy is the key to health, happiness and well being. The more positive you are, the better your life will be in every area”

When do the Students feel happy ? Or when do they feel sad ? These questions can be answered in different ways. Does this affect their learning ? Yes it does.

Life is full of situations and experiences. The child's reaction and response to these situations can affect his level of motivation and satisfaction. The greater the satisfaction the greater will be his motivation and better will be his learning. Satisfaction in life is not just material. Individual's family friends and inter personal skills affect their confidence in the presence of others and are all linked to their inclination to learning. A child's learning curve can change with situation, time & surrounding company etc.

His engagement in learning is based on his experiences. A happy and emotionally motivated child can be easily encouraged to score better.

Parents play a major role in the well-being of the child. A family which is happy gives respect to members and cares for individuals will have happy children. A child with a disturbed or broken family needs extra efforts to concentrate and focus. This affects his material inclination to study.

In a classroom, a child who is friendly and has many friends is very happy. The child who loves his peers and classmates and teachers is more inclined to do well. The school also plays a major role in the well-being of a child.

Well-being is also contagious. A positive attitude has the ability to change the people around you. This is also applicable to a teacher in the class. A happy teacher will improve engagement in the class and will be liked by all.

Positive emotions are essential for academic success. It is our responsibility as adults, to ensure that we provide such a surrounding for our children and ensure a positive well-being.
